A large proportion of Americans in Europe are unhappy—half of them, I estimate, though the fraction may be too large.

There are thousands of Americans traveling here who have no business here; who would be travely be as nothing to offer; who would be travely be as nothing to offer; who would be travely better off at home. He declines to off-r the slight incense of "pour boire" and when the porter of head water pleasantly says, on his departure, "bon jour" or "buon giorno," or "gutentag," and frankly holds out his hand for the expected pence, Battons denounces him as a swindler and a beggar in fairly good Eaglish and wishes he was out of this rascally country.

In short Mr. Buttons refused to conform gracefully to the labits of the people among whom he travels. He sweats every time he has baggage weighed and registered and calls in a loud voice for "a cheek."
